SECRET EXCISE 60. EO ED

September 9, 1962 - Sunday

Henry Hunt left this morning, by the Golden Arrow, for Paris. I took a long walk in the beautiful weather.

PORTIONS DENIED AS INDICATED

I spent a delightful evening dining with the O'Shaughnessys. During the afternoon I wrote outlines for three minor speeches I must make next week. It was a [redacted], sunny day, with a temperature of about 65 degrees.

The only untoward happening of the afternoon was when Hutchins telephoned me to say Nicky was on the telephone from Washington. This alarmed me, since it seemed such an unusual thing for him to do. E and the children were supposed to have been enroute from Cape Cod to Washington some time during the course of the day. A rather hysterical voice, not recognizable by me as Nicky's, said he had called [redacted] to tell me something important. I asked him whether it was bad news, and he said "yes". I at once conjectured that all the family, with the exception of himself, had been killed. The communication was cut, and I was in the process of calling Phil Graham in Washington to try to get him to check on what might have
